1.0. Identification

An organization shall identify and comply with the legal (statutory and regulatory) requirements applicable for its products and services. The organization is required to demonstrate that the statutory and regulatory requirements applicable to its products and services have been properly identified, understood and conform to the requirements.

2.0. Compliance

The identified statutory and regulatory requirements of the organization are expected to be integrated within the resource management in case of product realization or service provision activities.

3.0. Auditing statutory requirements:

It has to be kept in mind by the auditors that applicable statutory and regulatory requirements as per the standard are only those that are relevant to the products/services within the defined scope. The auditors are expected to follow the statutory and regulatory requirements that are relevant to standard in case of products/services e.g. for food products, it is FSSAI;

3.2. Auditors are advised to consult internal/external sources for collecting relevant information on general and/or specific statutory and regulatory requirements applicable to the products and services within the defined scope, before commencing the audit.

3.3. During actual execution of audit, the auditors are expected to verify the following information:

- a) whether the organization has suitable methodology in place for identifying/determining the applicable statutory and regulatory requirements and its periodical updation;
- b) whether the organization has identified and kept the applicable statutory and regulatory requirements up-to-date;
- c) whether the organization are utilizing these legal requirements as process inputs while monitoring process outputs for compliance and
- d) whether the organization has the capacity to comply with the statutory and regulatory requirements.
